

On October 16, 2008 Renée M. Brown, CEO was the guest lecturer to the Construction Project Management students at the New York Real Estate Institute in New York City. Renée's lecture focused on how she and her husband established their general contracting/construction management business and how the organization continues to be successful, even in these tough economic times. Renée also spoke about Green Technology and Sustainability and how C.W. Brown utilizes these technologies in their every day business environment.

Professor Sal Rozenberg sent the following email thanking Renée for giving such an inspiring lecture.

Hello Renee,

Please allow me to express my personal appreciation for your lecture and Cheryl's support for the October 2008 CPM course.

I received such a positive feedback from the student's to better understanding on what it takes to establish a business and years of dedication to make a construction oriented company successful.

I hope you will be receptive to once again provide your insight and experience to the future CPM course as of February 2009 and other potential events.

Looking forward to our joint collaboration for providing information to group of diversity for business success.

Let's stay in touch and if you have any questions, feel free to call me.

Best regards,
Sal Rozenberg
